SPECIAL FEATURE: Received a letter from Jeannette Guinard, whose aunt was ORA NICHOLS. Ora died in November 1951. Here is an article Jeannette sent me from CBS dated 10/22/40.

WOMAN SOUND TECHNICIAN HAS ALWAYS COMPETED WITH MEN

" Ora Nichols, Columbia's only woman sound technician, has to compete with the best men in the business, but it doesn't bother her in the least. She's been competing with men ever since her school days.

Ora was the only girl in a family of seven children and before she entered high school was nicknamed 'Tomboy' Nichols, because of her fistic prowess. Her family insisted that she have one ladylike virtue and encouraged her to take piano lessons.

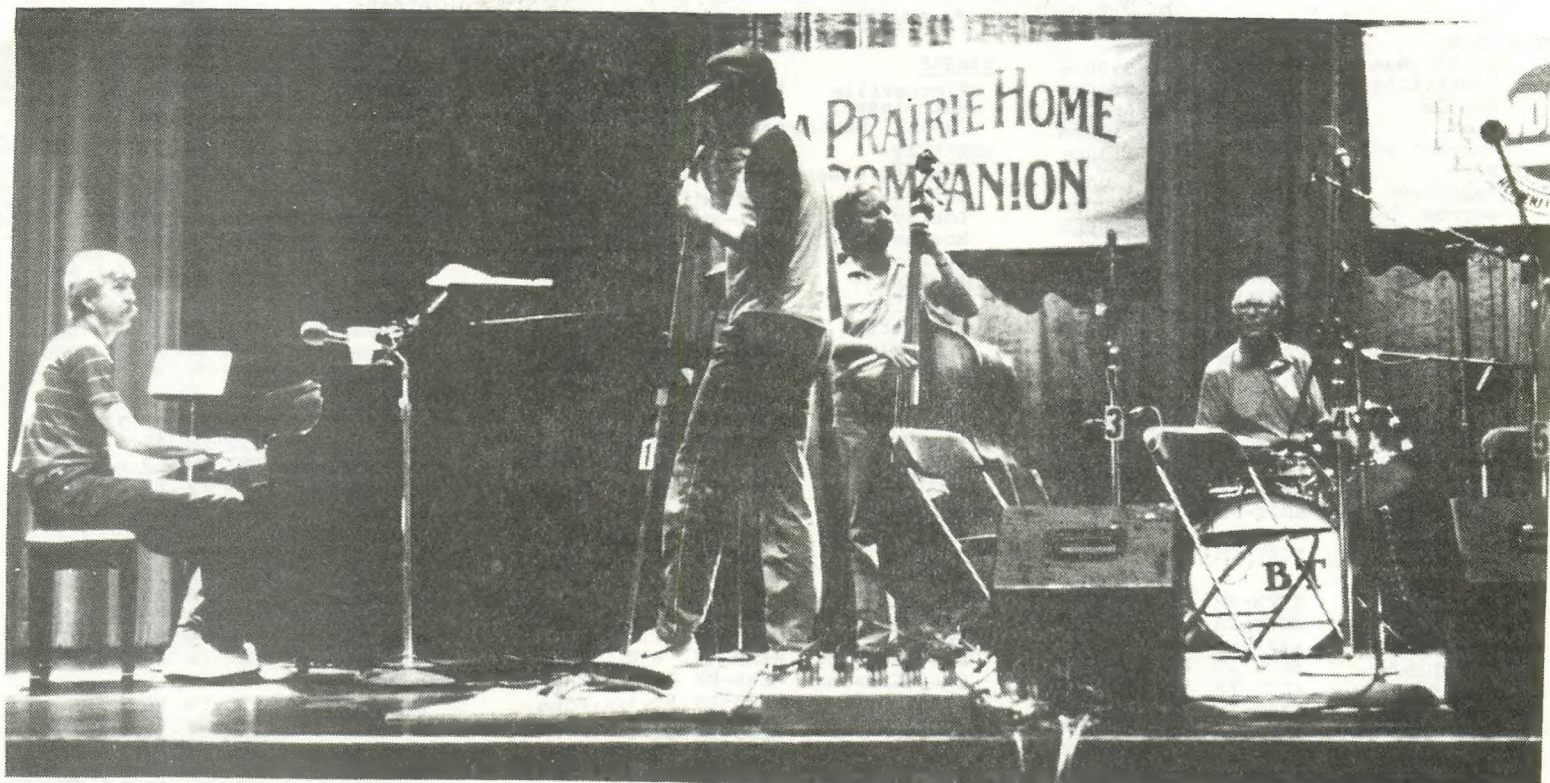

Ora's first job was playing the piano in a motion picture theatre. While working there she met her late husband, Arthur Nichols. He was a drummer in the band and after their marriage, they went on a vaudeville tour. When silent films went out, the Nichols decided to concentrate on sound effects for radio.

The life of a sound effects technician is one continuous round of controlled noise. The tools of Ora's trade range from old-fashioned scrubbing boards to carrot scrapers and potato mashers. Mere bells, whistles and sirens are commonplace things. Ora isn't really happy unless she is hard at work on a difficult effect. During the 12 years she has been at CBS, Ora singles out the "crashing of the bridge" for the dramatization of "The Bridge of San Luis Rey" as her most difficult assignment. It took her three days of constant experiment and rejection to obtain the desired effect of the structure breaking and crashing into a ravine.

An official at Columbia recently said of Ora: "She maintains her job as a sound effects technician because of her ability, sense of showmanship, and wide experience in being able to produce sound effects called for in difficult, experimental scripts. A sound effects job is a man's job and she is able to compete with the best."

A WEEKLY VARIETY
RADIO SHOW
BROADCAST LIVE

A PRAIRIE HOME COMPANION

COAST-TO-COAST
EACH SATURDAY ON
218 STATION NETWORK

GARRISON KEILLOR, M.C.

American Public Radio Network

In an old vaudeville theater, a tall young cracker-barrel philosopher stands at a microphone, joking about life, introducing musicians and reporting the news from Lake Wobegon, Minn.

Two million people huddle around radios across the country to listen — like the old days of Jack Benny and Fred Allen. It's Garrison Keillor's "A Prairie Home Companion," broadcast live Saturday evenings on 218 American Public Radio stations.

Keillor, 39, who says he's shy, stands up there 6-foot-4 in his beige suit, doing an easy-going two-hour radio variety show in the midst of the television era, and is one of the hottest things around.

His thoughts drift each week to Lake Wobegon (woe-begone), his mythical little home town "time forgot and the decades cannot improve...where the women are strong, the men good looking and the children above average."

Powdermilk Biscuits is the prime sponsor. They come in the big blue box or the brown bag with "stains that indicate freshness."

"Heavens, they're tasty, and expeditious." They give shy people "the power to get up and do what needs to be done."

Bertha's Kitty Boutique encourages cat ranching; the Fearmonger Shop serves paranoids and offers a safety toilet seat a yard high to be out of the reach of snakes; the Chatterbox Cafe serves a strawberry cream pie that "makes grown men cry and lose all ambition in life."

There's the Open Clothes Shop; Ralph's Pretty Good Grocery ("If you can't find it at Ralph's, you probably can get along without it."); Bob's Bank, which says "Never a borrower or lender be... Save at the sign of the sock."

At 5 p.m., central time, usually in the old World Theater in downtown St. Paul, there are a few guitar notes, and Keillor begins singing in his easy-going voice:

"Well, look who's coming through the door.

The music, low budget, is a mixture of jazz, bluegrass, western swing, light opera, and ethnic. It is played by the Butch Thompson Jazz Trio, Stoney Lonesome and the Bluegrass Band, and various others, using pianos, zithers, harpischords, fiddles, dulcimers, banjos and mandolins.

Some compare Keillor to Will Rogers, some to Fred Allen. But he's an original. No other show is quite like it. Keillor's make-believe stories are loaded with humor and the audience roars, but he also cuts through to a lot of real life.

One fan wrote:

"This city of Washington, I suspect, could use a good bit of Lake Wobegon."

The writer: Supreme Court Justice Harry Blackmun.

YOU are cordially invited to become an active participant in the newly formed VINTAGE BROADCAST SOCIETY.

MEMBERSHIP is open to all individuals seriously interested in vintage radio entertainment. Annual dues are a modest $15 made payable in either check or money order to:

RON BARON
2475 West 16th Street
Brooklyn, NY 11217

IN ADDITION to full club membership, you will receive regularly issued editions of "On-the-Air" - the organization's newsletter.

CLUB MEETINGS will be held. They will convene on a semi-regular basis. Although each meeting will be scheduled to transact club business and formulate decisions on designated topics, it will also be an opportunity for members to voice their individual criticisms, opinions and general viewpoint concerning the club in general and subjects in particular. In addition, club meetings will present an agreeable atmosphere in which members can personally meet one another and discuss all radio-related items.

WE URGE you to join the Vintage Broadcast Society today. If you have friends who may be interested in becoming active members, please have them contact us direct.
